Acknowledgments

The principal support for my work on Atsugewi has come from fellowships from the Social Science Research Council and the John Simon Guggenheim Memorial Foundation. In addition, assistance has been received from the Committee on Research, University of California, Davis; the Survey of California Indian Languages, Berkeley; Yale University's Ford Foundation Program in Behavior Science, and the National Science Foundation. To all these organizations, I extend thanks.

Over the years, I have had the help of a number of student assistants who have gone through borrowed word-lists and published sources, copying out items on cards. I want particularly to record my obligation to C. Eugene Farmer, Merna McEuen and Mrs. Jacqueline Doeckel Appleton.

The text of the lexicon was first typed in its entirety by Margaret McGimpsey, whose skill and conscientiousness eliminated many errors that would otherwise have found their way into the final version; I am much obliged to her.

After ten years of waiting, the manuscript was too faded to go before the camera. So, in retyping, the opportunity was taken to institute some needed revision. In that work, I have been fortunate to have the services of Marion Horwell, whose care and intelligence have helped to clarify a number of unclear points; she is responsible for the final version.

Others have helped over the years: in the field, Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Neasham, Mr. and Mrs. John Ley and family, and Arthur Barnes and family; Professors R. F. Heizer and Mary R. Haas pointed out material in the files at Berkeley and allowed me to make copies of relevant portions; J. T. Ruckle, who helped in the search for library materials pertaining to Jeremiah Curtin.

In addition to those named above, I wish to thank Flora Olmsted, Elaine Olmsted, Carolyn F. Wall, L. A. Timm, and M. A. Baumhoff for assistance and encouragement.

PREFACE

Atsugewi is a language of northeastern California assigned to the Palaihnihan branch of the Hokan family. Probably never more than a few hundred in number, its speakers occupied the northern slopes of Mount Lassen along Hat Creek and, to the east, Dixie Valley. The two groups spoke mutually intelligible, but distinct, dialects: Atsuge along Hat Creek and Apwaruge in Dixie Valley. The environments were different, too. Hat Creek is a cold stream running through heavy stands of the monumental sugar pine (Pinus lambertiana Dougl.), whereas Dixie Valley is dry and surrounded by low volcanic hills; its flora and fauna are reminiscent of the Modoc plateau and the transsierra desert rather than the Sierra-Cascade forest ecology of Hat Creek. For details see Garth 1953.

The data collected here are mostly from the Hat Creek dialect, except for those marked AB (the initials of Arthur Barnes, the single surviving Dixie Valley informant known to me). I began work on the language in 1953 and was privileged to work with a number of the very few surviving speakers of the language. The one who contributed most was the late Ike Wilson, a man of about sixty when I first knew him. His English was excellent, and, though he became blind in middle life, his knowledge of local topography was precise enough to enable him to point out distant landmarks from memory when at home. Considering that his daily language had been English for many years, he was surprisingly adept at serving as an informant for Atsugewi. The bulk of the material presented here came from Mr. Wilson, and whatever value there is in the work is mostly due to his concern for the preservation of the language of his people.

All forms in the following lexicon which are not otherwise marked for informant were obtained from Mr. Wilson. Other sources of material are marked as follows:

RW - Roy Wilson (brother to Ike Wilson)

BW - Boquita Wilson (wife to Roy)

LL - Mrs. Lulu Lamar

CT - Clyde Thompson

G - form reproduced from Garth 1953

C - from the field notes of Jeremiah Curtin, preserved in the archives (as ms. 2059, Bureau of American Ethnology) of the Smithsonian Institution, and made available to me through the courtesy of Professor Mary R. Haas, who first identified the language involved as likely to be Atsugewi.

All of the preceding represent the Atsuge (Hat Creek) dialect.

AB - Arthur Barnes (only source of Apwaruge dialect material).

Purpose and Plan of the Work. The aim of this dictionary is to provide a record of what is now known of the Atsugewi language primarily to facilitate study of the history of the people and their culture. Every effort has therefore been made to render the material comparable with the records of the other Hokan languages. The notation is phonemic and follows the system first set forth in my 'Atsugewi Phonology' and used in A History of Palaihnihan Phonology.

The vowels of Atsugewi are /i e a o u ə i. e. a. o. u. ə. / and the semivowels are /y w h/. Consonants are /p t k q ʔ m n ŋ w j s z ʃ x r l θ/. Stresses are ordinary (unmarked) and strong /'/. For phonetic details and analytical arguments, see Olmsted 1958.

All verb roots and affixes are marked as to conjugation in accordance with the system set forth in my 'Atsugewi Morphology I: Verb Inflection', unless there is insufficient information to allow such assignment, in which case the status as verb is indicated by the English translation 'to ----'.

This lexicon, representing as it does an obsolescent language now nearly extinct, can hardly claim analytical completeness. Since it is intended to give Hokanists as full as possible a stock of materials among which to browse for cognates, all recorded alternants have been included. Many of those differ only slightly. Their inclusion may perhaps be justified by the possibility they lend for internal reconstruction, even though their final status may never be known. There are several possible hypotheses: the first is the well-known (since the time of Angulo) alternation between forms in long vowel, short vowel and vowel plus glottal stop; second is dialect mixture, including the borrowing of closely similar material from the related Achumawi; third is age-graded linguistic difference; fourth is sex-typed linguistic differences, a factor not to be ruled out in view of the system found by Sapir among the related, neighboring Yana. In short, there are crucial socio-linguistic data without which such questions cannot be decided, and those data are not likely to be forthcoming, given the nearly complete loss of the speakers of the language. Such alternations are morphophonemic, not phonemic: the fact that English 'either' appears with an initial vocalic element sometimes in [i.] and sometimes in [ay] does not mean that [i.] and [ay] are not phonemically distinct, as in 'kind' and 'keened' or 'me' and 'my'. Curtin also noted alternants of that sort, though without specifying the informant.

The original version of this lexicon, completed more than a decade ago, began with a biographical sketch of Jeremiah Curtin. When the Indiana University Series where it was first accepted ceased operations for lack of funds, the manuscript remained in limbo. After a few years, the sketch of Curtin was removed and published separately in Historiographia Linguistica. I quote here the material dealing with Curtin's field work on Atsugewi:

Jeremiah Curtin was the first to make acceptable records of Atsugewi, and they remained the best work on the language for more than fifty years. Curtin's first brush with the language was a casual affair, sandwiched in between sessions of work with Yana, which occupied him during the December of 1884. The reason was one familiar to later workers: Curtin's Yana informant, Jack, was undependable and disappeared for days at a time on gambling excursions. In order to keep busy, Curtin writes in his Memoirs: "One day I sent for Moody Tom, a Hat Creek Indian, and began work on the Hat Creek language." (Curtin 1940:347). Apparently Curtin alternated work on the two languages from about the middle of December until early in January, since he records that they left for Redding on the 9th and he does not mention the Hat Creeks again until his account of the latter part of July 1885 when he apparently spent about a week at Hat Creek working with two informants, Shave Head and Buckskin. As far as can be discovered from his Memoirs, this ended his experience with Atsugewi. Nonetheless, his work has a lasting value because of its great accuracy; that accuracy was no doubt due to his experience in linguistic field work. It may be surmised that his skill was much greater than that of any other of the workers who scoured the West for the Smithsonian Institution during the 19th Century.

The first part of the word for "rifle"-- ukitrotpi--is at present unanalyzable but may be borrowed from a Russian phrase or compound containing /kit/ "whale" and perhaps also /orúde/ "cannon," "gun." It is possible, though not probable, that At. "rifle" may reflect a Russian phrase for a harpoon-shooting gun employed in whaling.)
