

UCLA

UCLA Historical Journal

Title

[Contributors]

Permalink

<https://escholarship.org/uc/item/2cx2t39w>

Journal

UCLA Historical Journal, 15(0)

Author

Historical Journal, [No author]

Publication Date

1995

Copyright Information

Copyright 1995 by the author(s). All rights reserved unless otherwise indicated. Contact the author(s) for any necessary permissions. Learn more at <https://escholarship.org/terms>

Contributors

ELIZABETH COVINGTON is Ph.D. candidate in the Modern European field at the University of California, Los Angeles. She is currently writing her dissertation on French Symbolism and the novelist Rachilde.

ELYSSA FAISON is a Ph.D. student in modern Japanese history at the University of California, Los Angeles, and is working on a dissertation entitled "The Jōko in Imperial Japan: The Construction of an Early Twentieth Century Working Class Culture."

MICHAEL E. LATHAM is a Ph.D. candidate in History at the University of California, Los Angeles. His research focuses on the relationship between social scientific theories of modernization, constructions of national identity, and American foreign policy during the Kennedy period. He is a coeditor of Knowledge and Postmodernism in Historical Perspective (New York: Routledge, 1996).

EUGENIA LEAN is a third-year Ph.D. student in modern Chinese history at the University of California, Los Angeles. She received her B.A. from Stanford University in 1990. Her interests include gender, political and cultural history, and the history of science. She is currently researching a 1930s media phenomenon and legal case of a female avenger named Shi Jianqiao, who had killed a famous warlord to revenge her father. Through this case, she hopes to examine the notion of filial piety and the cultural archetype of the Woman Warrior in Chinese modernity.

REBECCA J. MEAD is a Ph.D. student in United States history at the University of California, Los Angeles. She received a B.S. from the University of New Mexico and an M.A. from San Francisco State University. Her recent research has focused on women's labor and political activism in California, race relations in the North American West, and U.S. social welfare policy history.

KAREN J. NISSEN is a Ph.D. candidate in History at the University of California, Los Angeles. She is writing her dissertation on Americanism in the Weimar Republic and its role in the shaping of a German national identity.

DIDIER Y. REISS is a Ph.D. student in Jewish history at the University of California, Los Angeles, and is working on a dissertation entitled "Positive-Historical Judaism: The Romanticism of Zacharia Frankel," which investigates the centrality of German-Jewish reformulations of German Romanticist conceptions of Volk and Law in the context of the nineteenth-century Jewish denominational struggles.

JASAMIN ROSTAM-KOLAYI is a Ph.D. candidate in Near Eastern history at the University of California, Los Angeles. She graduated Phi Beta Kappa from Wellesley College in 1992. Her main research interests within the scope of modern Middle history are women in social movements and the women's press.

J.B. SHANK is a Ph.D. candidate in History and Humanities at Stanford University with a particular concentration in modern European intellectual history. His dissertation examines the reception of Newtonian natural philosophy in France in the eighteenth century. Currently a Fulbright Fellow living and researching in Paris, Shank has previously held fellowships from the Stanford Humanities Center (1994-1995) and the National Endowment for Humanities (1990-1991). With M.A.s from Stanford and from St. John's College in Annapolis, Maryland, Shank taught secondary school history and art history before enrolling at Stanford (1986-1992).

ALLISON L. SNEIDER is a Ph.D. candidate in United States history at the University of California, Los Angeles. She received her B.A. from Reed College in 1989 and her M.A. from UCLA in 1993. Her dissertation examines the American woman suffrage movement during the Gilded Age with particular attention to the politics of suffrage internationalism and the impact of United States expansion on women's demands for the vote. She is a coeditor of Knowledge and Postmodernism in Historical Perspective (New York: Routledge, 1996).

ELIZABETH TOWNSEND is a Ph.D. candidate in Modern European History at the University of California, Los Angeles. She is currently working on her dissertation, "When You Have Lost Your All in a World's Upheaval': The Great War, Vera Brittain, and Others: A Biography."

TAMARA ZWICK is Ph.D. candidate in German history at the University of California, Los Angeles. She is currently working on her dissertation, which is an examination of women's correspondences, kinship ties, and class identity in nineteenth-century Germany.