PREHISTORY OF THE FAR WEST Homes of Vanished Peoples

Luther S. Cressman

Luther S. Cressman's Prehistory of the Far West is the first book-length synthesis of the prehistory of far-western North America. It is at the same time a scientific reminiscence exemplifying the period of its author's active life in the field when the archeological approaches and interpretations of today were being shaped. The synthesis incorporates the multidisciplinary approach in which Professor Cressman was a pioneer and the warm humanistic bent for which he is especially known among his students and colleagues.

The Expedition of Capt. J. W. Davidson from Fort Tejon to the Owens Valley in 1859

Edited by
Philip J. Wilke and Harry W. Lawton

The expedition of Capt. J. W. Davidson in the summer of 1859 resulted in the earliest detailed account of the Owens Valley, east-central California, and its Paiute inhabitants. Davidson commanded a punitive expedition of U.S. Cavalry from Ft. Tejon to the Owens Valley to recover livestock stolen from ranches in the southern counties of California and rumored to have been driven to this valley east of the Sierras. Upon reaching the valley, Davidson found no livestock of any kind. Instead he found the unjustly accused Paiutes engaged in collecting and storing food supplies for winter. They were also operating a remarkably extensive agricultural system that involved irrigation of wild plant species on vast tracts of land. In accordance with his instructions, Davidson filled out his report with what are apparently the earliest detailed ethnographic observations on the Owens Valley Paiute.

This volume contains an introductory essay, photographs of scenes along the route of the march, and extensive explanatory notes. It is both the story of the expedition and an account of the observations of its commander. Those interested in western military history, California history, and California and Great Basin ethnography will find this volume an important contribution.

A MULTIDISCIPLINARY SYMPOSIUM ON THE CALIFORNIA ISLANDS
February 27 through March 1, 1978, Santa Barbara, California

The islands off the coast of California and Baja California, Mexico, have stimulated considerable research over the last decade. A multidisciplinary symposium is to be held to bring researchers together and to summarize and advance our knowledge of these islands and of island processes in general. Emphasis will be on evolution, ecology, and biogeography of plants and animals (both terrestrial and marine). Invited and contributed papers will deal also with anthropology, geology, and paleontology.

Those interested in receiving a formal announcement of the meeting and the call for papers should write to:

California Indians in Pen and Brush

Theodora Kroeber
Albert B. Elsasser
Robert F. Heizer

Here for the first time are collected as many drawings and paintings of California Indians as the authors' search could discover, and constituting most of those presently extant and available for reproduction. The Indians in these pictures were the living contemporaries of the men who portrayed them; the artists were Whites, European and American; the period covered was something over three hundred years. The latest of the pictures were done in the 1880s by which time the camera eye had all but superceded the artist eye view of persons and places. The text by Theodora Kroeber (author of ISHI) provides the background to the pictures. The documentation and notes at the end provide historical, ethnographic and biographical commentary.

HUNTERS, SEAMEN, AND ENTREPRENEURS

The Tuna Seinermen of San Diego

MICHAEL K. ORBACH

Orbach lived for two years as a neophyte member of a fishing community, and spent five months at sea as both a fisherman and a social scientist. His record of the sociology of the tuna fisherman—describing their relationships with one another at sea, the management of their individual enterprises and their industry, the ecology, and their domestic and communal lives—presents an anthropological portrait of an industry, an occupation, and a lifestyle.
