Title
Literary justice? Poems from guantánamo bay prison camp

Permalink
https://escholarship.org/uc/item/33n3v2c5

Journal
Comparative Literature Studies, 48(3)

ISSN
0010-4132

Author
Weber, E

Publication Date
2011

DOI
10.5325/complitstudies.48.3.0417

Peer reviewed
Literary Justice

Comparative Literature Studies

Discuss the influence of historical and social contexts on the interpretation of literary works. How do political, economic, and cultural factors shape our understanding of literary texts? Analyze the impact of colonialism and imperialism on literature from different regions. Explore the role of translations and the challenges they present for readers and critics. How do cultural syncretism and hybridity affect literary traditions? Investigate the ways in which literature reflects and comments on social issues, from oppressed voices to resistance movements. Consider the role of literature in shaping national identities and in promoting multiculturalism. How does literature engage with global issues such as climate change and human rights? Discuss the ethical implications of literary works and the responsibility of the author to the reader. Evaluate the influence of literary theory on the interpretation of texts and the development of new critical approaches.
The medium of the creative artist is not a geographical one.

He is not particularly interested in the medium, but in the "medium" he uses. He is interested in the process of creation, the means by which ideas are translated into form.

The medium, then, is not an obstacle to be overcome, but a tool to be used in the service of the artist. It is not the end, but a means to an end.

The artist must be familiar with his medium, but he must not be slave to it. He must be able to use it effectively, but he must also be able to transcend it.

The medium is, in a sense, an extension of the artist's mind. It is a means by which he can express his ideas and emotions.

The medium is not the message, but it is a necessary part of the message. It is a tool for the artist, not an obstacle to be overcome.

In short, the medium is not the message, but it is a necessary part of the message. It is a tool for the artist, not an obstacle to be overcome.
The commence of my body

The commence of my body

literary justice