BQE

BJay Shapiro

Abstract

The poem is about a snow drop hitting my window while driving under a bridge. The shape made me remember older boys with daisy bb guns shooting at parked trains near what is now the Highline. Then a kid with a snowball slams my windshield while I was deep in memory.
BQE

snow loose
water drop
it was sunny
made a shape
when it hit my window
like the train’s
in the rail yards
after twenty-twos

off the BQE
by an entrance
a student going home across
a bridge dropped
a snowball
hit my window
sounded like a train
should have cracked
made me jump
like a B.B.
Fig. 1. Windshield damaged by random pallets. 2018. Photography: WHAM.

About the author

BJay Shapiro is a NYC based writer of poetry, songs, & scripts, working with an entertainment media company. Email: bjschapiro@gmail.com.