ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The UCLA Historical Journal represents the combined efforts of many graduate students. Our contributors and reviewers represent graduate students from universities ranging from California to Pennsylvania and Georgia. Moreover, UCLA history graduate students performed the day-to-day business and publication of this journal.

Although this volume is the collaborative result of many people's labor, we would like to specifically thank the members of our editorial board, who unselfishly volunteered their time and critical eyes to help with the myriad of editorial tasks necessary for such a project to succeed. Our Book Review Editor, Doris Namala, deserves special thanks for her continuing commitment to the Journal, as well as high praise for her expertise and self-sufficiency in overseeing this area. Managing Editor Steve Wardinski also deserves special praise for his efforts in all areas of this journal's publication. We would also like to thank our adjunct editors who overwhelmed us with their response to our need for readers and helped us to choose the following articles from a large number of excellent submissions. We greatly appreciate the advice and guidance of Greg Beyrer, who edited volume 17. And finally we would like to thank the Graduate Student Association and the UCLA History Department for the financial support that makes such an endeavor possible.

The articles in this volume embody a wide variety of themes, geographical locations and historical periods that exemplify our efforts to encourage graduate students from a wide range of historical frameworks to publish their research.
