

Historically Black is a short documentary that looks at recruitment of non-black students at Texas Southern University, one of the nation's largest Historically Black Colleges and Universities (HBCUs). By chronicling Texas Southern's efforts to diversify and its impact on the campus community, the film explores the changing role of HBCUs in post-segregated America and addresses what this might mean for the future of these deep-rooted institutions.