Research notes: On page 60/0676a, H notes "This is the only kind of native cottonwood that there is around here. A "cottonwood" that is on the Mission grounds proved to be Populus balsamifera L., which is a native of back east, and another "cottonwood" which is in the pear orchard of the Mission, which Doña Antonia called curly cottonwood, proved to be Populus tremiloides Michx., Quaking Aspen. Thus it is that we gathered on the Mission grounds two kinds of cottownwood that are not native." On the next page H notes "Alamo. Ant. nesc. med. uses." The next pages are about the trees. On page 60/0679, there is a letter to Hart (Merriam) which states "The "alamo chino" and the "alamo" come back from the Professor with the same Latin names on them!!!!!! So they must be the same tree!!!!!! How is this?????? Are all alamos called alamos chinos?????? Or are the chinos and no chinos?????? Does alamo chino mean Cinnaman alamo or curly alamo????? What is there curly on it, its bark????? J.P.H. H. J. C." There is some faint text, and it is not clear if there is any Asc. data or not. Isabel notes on this and next page.

Reel 61

Content: 208 entries. Harrington's own work on Mutsun as well as rehearings of Rumsen and/or Esselen.

Words and phrases related to various foods, plants, roots, medicines, and related gathering/subsistence activities; words and phrases related to smoking tobacco; phrases related to sweathouse activities; various phrases and words. Some entries include cultural information about the plant in English or Spanish. Most plant terms appear as a series of the name for one of the plant, the name for it as object of the sentence, the name for more than one of it, the name for more than one as object of the sentence, the related verb for collecting/harvesting the plant, and the form for going to collect the plant (noun as singular, singular object, plural, plural object, related verb, verb with -na andative suffix). Some actions (verbs) are given in various forms (to be short, becomes short, became short, will be short, etc.).

Reel 57 Arroyo Religious (Christian) Material

Content: 330 entries. Mostly Christian/Catholic religious words and phrases. These are Arroyo's materials, recopied by Marta Herrera, not Harrington's work.

Words and phrases related to prayer and religion; people and entities from the Christian Bible; biblical translations; phrases related to sin and confession; song lyrics; many longer entries of translated prayer, sermons, catechism (teaching Catholic theology), confessions; days of the week and holidays; death and apocalypse. Arroyo's translation of Catholic religious materials into Mutsun. The language usage, vocabulary, and grammar in this chapter is very different from the other chapters, and the interpretation of many words and sentences is unclear.

Entries 63-64 contain protected cultural material that has been removed from the public version of the collection. The complete version that contains this material is available to Community members.

Research notes: Nameless prayer 1, line 1. Numbered 1. Typed. Note "[Cues. ph. 78]." 57/0225a contains an inventory of the nameless prayers in Ha's handwriting. The Ar version of all of these nameless prayers is typed, and the typed letters are often not clear (bad copy or bad typewriter or ribbon). Furthermore, there appear to be numerous errors in converting whatever the previous handwritten manuscript was (probably Ar's original manuscript) to the typed version. Typed versions are all given as faithfully as possible to the typing here. Re-elicitations by Harrington generally begin at the bottom of the same page and continue until the next page of Ar data (which is usually the following page, but sometimes further.)

Ans.: They dug a hole in the ground and put fire and stones in it, and then put estaliate (unclear) and other herbs in it and took woman's clothes off and covered her with a fresaca, and as she sweated, the sick woman being with the cupaloa to the ground (on her back) another woman kept wiping her sweat off, so she never had much sweat on her body and after that she was weak, weak, but buena y sana, and for 40 dias afterward was her aiet period (su cieta) without eating meat. This process was called his/°s/°i. Nesc. what they called the pit. At the misma more cuando nació la cristura they put the woman on the sweatpit, immediately after she has given birth. Above means they tatemaban la mujer a la media noche. horpey murutrse, media noche. nennes, yo lo echaba menos. Only meaning." Asc. explanation suggests a different verb, but hiswi seems more likely here, although subject-object relation is unclear (one might expect maria santase hesu kristu instead of the reverse). Asc. suggests nennes for nenis, but neniSSa seems more likely.

Reel 57 Harrington's Re-hearing of Arroyo's Religious Material

Content: 370 entries. Harrington's partial rehearing of Arroyo's Christian materials.

Many various actions (verbs and short verbal phrases). This chapter contains Harrington's rehearing of Arroyo's Christian materials on the same reel, so some of the content is related to Christian religion and beliefs. However, some of the content is non-religious sentences on other topics using words that Arroyo used. Harrington did not do a thorough rehearing of this Arroyo material, so many of the words Arroyo used are missing.

Arroyo Gramática

Content: 734 entries. Arroyo's explanation of the grammar of Mutsun.

Gives examples of how to use suffixes on words; how to structure sentences; question words, how to express when an action happened/is happening; questions and commands (interrogatives and imperatives); numbers and phrases using numbers, counting, first/second/third/etc. (ordinal numbers), grouping by numbers of things etc. This material is more clearly organized by structures than the other chapters, and represents Arroyo's analyzed material, whereas the Arroyo Vocabulario is less-analyzed material.

Translation: to come to grab, to come to grab
Orig. spell: Oiou, oiohu
Source: Cap. 4
Source trans.: Quando se coja, en tiempo de coger
Research notes: Ar seems to intend a suffix more like -way, but in other locations he spells -wu like this. A confusion in the translation seems more likely than a different use of -wu or -way, especially since he ordered this example with -na, -yni, etc.

373 oyona

There also was an enormous head-dress with feathers of the aura like a cap. They performed wonderful feats, jumped in the fire without singing even the hairs on their legs, and held coals in their mouths. They left the dance and returned with only half the head and the blood streaming from the rest. The hiwei and lolei dances were not known. Tolaache was known but not much used. Merriam Vocabulary, Part II

Content: 272 entries. Vocabulary list by Merriam. Many entries found with different transcription in other chapters.

Various terms for animals, birds, fish, insects and reptiles; terms for activities related to hunting, fishing and subsistence; terms for baskets, type and use of baskets; terms for plants and roots, and terms related to gathering and harvesting; names for Tribes and peoples; placenames and villages. Almost all entries are single words rather than sentences. Note to entry 258 has an explanation about resistance from the Mutsun people when the mission arrived and effect on loss of knowledge of place names.

That early writers, such as Taylor, have called moot-soon a village name, means nothing. And in the mission records of San Juan all such names are classed as village names, even the name au-si-ma'. yakSun yakSun
Tulareño (Yokuts) people, Indian
N

Translation: San Joaquin Valley Indians (Tularenos)
Orig. spell: yak-shyoon
Source: Me68III392-6
Source trans.: San Joaquin Valley Indians, general term applied to any tribe.
Research notes: It is noted "For the special tribe names of that region that she knows see above. Such is the pitiable material on tribe names and place names that Ascencion can furnish. Most of the names that she knows, she cannot locate, and she explains why this is as follows. When the Spanish established the mission at San Juan the Indians were not taken by surprise as they were at some missions, but had long spied on conditions at Monterey and were determined to resist. For several years the Indians of that region lived in the hills, having abandoned their rancherias, and fleeing whenever the Spanish soldiers came to capture them for settling at the mission. This broke up the knowledge of place names badly so that even in 1830 it would have been difficult to get thorough information on the place names of San Benito County. Furthermore, the unbaptized Indians were in league with the San Joaquin Valley Indians who used to make horse stealing raids on the ranches, and would even come down through the chimneys of adobe houses at night and murder families of Spanish and baptized Indians. These Indians when they caught a baptized Indian would cut a strip of skin off of his back and tie it around his neck and tell him to go and tell the Spanish that they did it. There are still a few other tribe names and place names in the notes that are not given above, and to hunt them now might take hours and duty calls to prepare questionnaire material diligently for asking Ascension while asking is still possible. There are also etymologies for some of the names given above that I cannot find. If I wait longer to try to make the list more perfect, it will take time from these last few precious days. But I will send them as soon as I get the notes filed and in order. I had imagined there would be a long period during which Ascencion could work a little each day.

It now appears that she is going to sink fast, and will be dead in a very few weeks. The situation worries me very much. I am anything but through with her. It will be a great loss of information when she dies, even if I succeed in working with her a little for say another month.

Research notes: Page headed "Numerals." Language name column headed "Costanoan." Languages are labeled with small letters, with Mutsun being row h, and the language name given as Mutsun. It is not clear how to interpret Hewitt's "ts", so it is transcribed simply as the ts of the practical orthography. Hewitt may have neutralized ts and T and used "ts" for both, as Arroyo sometimes did. Hewitt's "ch" indicates practical orthography c, and Hewitt's "j" indicates practical orthography h. This Hewitt document may possibly represent Mutsun data copied from Arroyo's Grammatica rather than original fieldwork.

V	V:Any	V	V:Any

Translation: narrow, big-cheeked
Orig. spell: Huichugtel, Casllugte
Source: 40-6
Source trans.: Chico
Research notes: Pinart's is a faithful copying of two extremely unclear, difficult to interpret words from Arroyo's Vocabulario. Interpretation of both words very unsure.

63 apsik , miste

apSe	miS	-te
apSe	miSSi	-Ste
be easy	be good	perfective
